Description of the Related Art In a typical dynamic random access memory (DRAM) structure, gate dielectric material is commonly formed over a conductive gate structure, a source region and a drain region. A trench is often formed in the semiconductor substrate and filled with gate dielectric material and a gate conductor. The trench is often referred to as a "trench fill gate". However, the typical method of depositing the gate dielectric material and gate conductor in the trench can be complicated and may result in a thicker layer of the gate dielectric material and the gate conductor in the trench. A thicker layer of the gate dielectric material and the gate conductor in the trench may negatively impact the device reliability. Therefore, there is a need for a semiconductor structure having a trench fill gate and a method for forming the same.Q: How to use 2D numpy array as mask array in scikit-learn I want
