If you want to get your own website, you will have to choose from two main alternatives: you can either hire a professional website developer or use a specialized website designer app and do everything yourself right from the get-go. Showit is a modern-looking, electron-based application that can help you build a website from scratch, without needing to know your way around HTML and JavaScript or knowing how to code. Easy to install and just as easy to get along with Before you get started, you should know that Showit requires you to have Adobe AIR installed on your computer. Other than that, getting started with the app is fairly easy thanks to the streamlined installer and a useful 'Get Started' wizard packed with tutorials. Upon first launch, the fact that Showit is mainly specialized in building photography websites becomes quite evident. User-friendly and intuitive interface The interface follows the pattern of most other website builders, namely it displays the website's structure three on the left, the main workspace in the middle and elements associated with HTML and sharing options on the right side of the main window. The app comes with multiple templates that can help you get started but it also offers enough editing options to fully personalize your website to make it stand out from the crowd. Ticks all the right boxes for a photography website builder As expected, you can work with almost all the elements via drag and drop, add interactions with transition effects, customize dynamic photo galleries or contact forms with email and text notifications and even upload your own fonts. Even more, Showit offers very good social media integration, with elements that can help you link your website to the most popular media services. It is also worth noting that by subscribing to Showit, you also get WordPress blog hosting included. Offers impressive flexibility for designing your dream photo website All in all, with a modern and intuitive interface, simple workflow and relatively-accessible monthly fee, Showit is a powerful solution for website design that is recommended for both professional and amateur photographers that want to get their work out into the world.
