Telepathy is a messenger that supports instant messaging and videoconferencing (VoIP). It provides a way for computers to communicate, using protocols such as xmpp. Telepathy includes a telepathy library, but it is not a graphical program; rather it is a library that is run by a graphical program. This article describes how to use Telepathy, using Telepathy GNOME, a graphical interface for Telepathy. ScreenZim is an instant messenger application that is mainly targeted at the use of data-intensive tasks. It is designed to be very lightweight. It uses the zintext protocol for text conversations, and the zim-mail protocol for instant messages. The protocol is written in a very minimalist manner, so that the format of the instant messages is the same as in text-based instant messengers such as Jabber, Pidgin, or Trillian. The application is written in Qt 4, which is a GUI toolkit developed by Nokia. Its homepage is SearM is an instant messaging tool for chatting over both voice and data networks, based on XMPP technology. SearM can also send and receive files using the common formats used by instant messaging clients: h323, zim, gopher, ftp, ftps, smtp and sftp. Scrolling through long lines of data is a pain in the neck. So if you're doing something tedious like compiling the Linux kernel, you'd want
